Father Michael's Musings

This coming Thursday affords us a wonderful opportunity to honor and celebrate the life and witness of an extraordinary man.

Patrick, kidnapped and sold into slavery, spent the early years of his life tending sheep on the windswept and harsh hills of Ireland.

Through the self-reflection his years in slavery gave him, he found himself drawn to the mystery of God.

He escaped.

But following his ordination, it was his desire to return to the land of his slavery, to the people who had enslaved him, and to walk with them and share with them the Good News of Christ.

He held no animosity, no desire for revenge, no longing to make those who abused him suffer; he simply wanted to be one with them and one of them. He was not an Irishman, but by golly, he became one. That is love!

A wonderful example for us when we face struggle and difficulty; can we find the courage to use that time to change the world and learn to love, even our enemies?

"The ambient nature sounds are making me too sleepy to hunt."

Just a Thought...
