Fr. Michael's Musings

240 years ago, a plucky band of firebrands and radicals gathered in the heat and humidity of Philadelphia and made a decision. They chose to declare independence from Great Britain.

A shocking turn of events; yet they were not lost in an illusion that this independence would be easy, or easily won. Yet, they chose to do it nonetheless.

In fact, they pledged to each other “our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.”

They knew that the new nation they were trying to build would be messy and difficult...and we have not disappointed them in the least. It is not easy to be this nation, it is hard work.

We have so many issues that polarize us, so many temptations to question the political leanings of others, and even challenge their commitment to our nation itself. It is not easy, and yet, this weekend we have a moment of common ground.

This weekend, we can simply pause and reflect and rejoice that we are blessed to be here, and to be citizens of this nation we all love. It's not easy...but by God, it's worth it.

“Who wants to help me with the fireworks this year?”

Just a Thought...

I wonder what alabaster cities look like.
