From the Workbench I ordered 8 pounds of nails this week. Ironically I needed these nails to build the cabinet for nails that is on my workbench. Now these aren't ordinary hardware store nails, they were 100 years ago but not now. I have been reading about how these nails are supposed to be superior to the nails of today better looking, better gripping and longer lasting but we'll see when they get here.

There is a quiet revolution that is taking place in woodworking these days, some people are abandoning their power tools and going back to the old tools, and the old ways of making things. I have been participating in my own way, but I think there is a virtue in finding the middle way. Using the old ways where they work best.

St. Paul warns us in the second reading not to get caught up in the present age but to be always seeking the will of God. There are good things in our world today, things that are useful and convenient but we cannot build our lives on them. If we seek peace in our age we need to be looking past the things of our age and look to those things that eternally endure.

We are not called to reject the advancements in our modern era we just need to reject the things in our modern era that lead us away from God.
