A WORD FROM THE PASTOR

(Part VII) Shortly after Fr. Blanchet arrived in the Oregon Country in 1838, he saw the need for a bishop to serve the settlers in the far-flung missions of the Northwest. Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missions was not at all clear. By the Treaty of 1818, the United States and Great Britain agreed to joint occupancy of the Oregon Country. Fr Blanchet had been sent by the Bishop of Quebec, whose jurisdiction extended to the Rocky Mountains. The Diocese of St. Louis was established in 1826, and its jurisdiction was probably the same. There was one archdiocese in the United States at the time, Baltimore, so the Oregon Country would have been included in its ecclesiastical province. Yet, Fr. Blanchet was a vicar general of the Bishop of Quebec, serving mostly French-Canadian Catholics in the Willamette Valley of the Northwest.

In a letter to the Bishop of Quebec dated March 19, 1840, Fr. Blanchet recommended that an auxiliary bishop of Quebec be sent to Fort Vancouver. Later, in 1842, when Fr. De Smet, S.J., came to St. Paul, he and Fr. Blanchet discussed the possibility of a diocese in the Oregon Country. Fr. De Smet presented these ideas and recommendations to church authorities in St. Louis, his home base. At the same time, Fr. Blanchet wrote to Bishop Signay in Quebec and to Bishop Rosati in St. Louis, urging their collaboration in providing governance and spiritual care (i.e., a bishop) for the missions in Oregon. Fr. Blanchet recommended Fr. De Smet for bishop. Fr. Blanchet considered himself unfit for the office.

The Canadian and American bishops did collaborate in petitioning Rome for the establishment of church governance in the lower Columbia region, but each made a different request. The Canadian church recommended that a diocese be established, with Fr. Blanchet as bishop. American auxiliary bishop Peter Kenrick of St. Louis proposed the establishment of a vicariate apostolic (a first step in becoming a diocese) with Father De Smet as vicar apostolic. Rome compromised; and on December 1, 1843, a vicariate apostolic was erected with Fr. Blanchet as vicar apostolic. Word of this decision did not reach Oregon until November 4, 1844. Bishop-Elect Blanchet decided to go to Canada for his episcopal ordination, crossing the bar of the Columbia River on December 5, 1844. It was a long trip: first to Honolulu, then around Cape Horn to England, doubling back from Liverpool to Boston, and finally arriving in Montreal towards the end of June 1845. On July 25th, Fr. Blanchet was ordained a bishop for the Oregon Country.

As Bishop-Elect Blanchet departed Oregon for his ordination, he reflected on his ministry in these words: "At the end of 1844, after six years of efforts disproportioned to the needs of the country, the vast mission of Oregon, on the eve of being erected into a vicariate apostolic, had gained nearly all of the Indian tribes, . . . it had brought six thousand pagans to the faith, . . . nine missions had been founded, and eleven churches and chapels had been erected." The church built on solid rock, in the Oregon Country.
