A WORD FROM THE PASTOR

(Part VI) In the early 1840s the political situation in the Oregon Country was unsettled. A treaty in 1818, and later renewed, granted a joint occupancy of the Oregon Country by the United States and Great Britain. In the meanwhile, attempts were made to establish a local government that would bring greater order and stability to the increasing number of settlers. At the time, the settlers were not equally protected by the law. The English Parliament (through the Hudson's Bay Company) had extended the civil laws of Canada to British subjects in the area; but there was no such provision for the Americans. Discussions began in 1841 on the establishment of a government in the Oregon Country, though the Canadians were cool to the idea, fearing the loss of their protected status.

Those promoting a provisional government were equally in opposition to the British Hudson's Bay Company, which had taken on both governmental and police duties in the area. Fr. Francis Norbert Blanchet was conflicted, since the establishment of a provisional government (American?) could easily affect his relationship with Dr. John McLoughlin, the chief factor of the British Hudson's Bay Company. The question of jurisdiction, and American sovereignty, was ultimately resolved pragmatically by the influx of American settlers over the Oregon Trail. Personally, though not officially, Dr. McLoughlin did support the idea of a provisional government. But no matter his thoughts and motivations, Dr. McLoughlin's first priority was to assist the emigrants who came west—at some cost to himself—no matter their nationality or background.

Fr. Blanchet's attitude toward the establishment of a provisional government is disputed by Oregon historians. It is surmised that Fathers Blanchet and Demers' British nationality prevented them from fully supporting the notion of a local government, but Blanchet himself denies this. He says that any perceived opposition on his part was a matter of timing and prudence. Whatever the facts might be, Father Blanchet participated in the early discussions (1841) regarding local governance, and he remained a respected leader in the Oregon community.

The vote for a Provisional Government took place on May 2, 1843. The male settlers of the Willamette Valley gathered at Champoege to cast their ballot. The count showed 52 for the Provisional Government of Oregon and 50 against. Though the Oregon Treaty of 1846 settled the border dispute between the United States and Canada (and Great Britain) at the 49th parallel, the Provisional Government continued until 1849, when the first governor of the Territory of Oregon (1848-1859) arrived.

Meanwhile, the Catholic community was also looking to organize. Within a year of arriving in the Oregon Country, Fr. Blanchet saw the need and usefulness of having a bishop on the lower Columbia River. When Father De Smet came to St. Paul in 1842 to meet Father Blanchet, a principal topic of discussion was the establishment of a diocese.
