In Syria and Iraq, evil destroys buildings and infrastructures, but especially the conscience of man. In the name of Jesus, who came into the world to heal the wounds of humanity, the Church feels called to respond to evil with good by promoting an integral human development of “each man and of the whole man.” To answer this difficult call, Catholics must strengthen the intra-ecclesial collaboration and the bonds of communion, which unite them with other Christian communities, seeking also cooperation with international humanitarian institutions and with all men of good will. I encourage you, therefore, to continue on the path of cooperation and sharing, and working together and in synergy. Please do not abandon the victims of this crisis, even if the world’s attention were to lessen.

I ask that you all bring my message of profound solidarity and closeness to those who are in trial and enduring the tragic consequences of this crisis. In communion with you and with your communities, I pray unceasingly for peace and the end of the torments and injustices in your beloved lands.

FAITH IN ACTION

This article comes from Our Sunday Visitor

Faith Focus for the Week

HOW DO I USE MY FREEDOM?
AM I BECOMING MORE LIKE CHRIST
AS I EXERCISE THE GIFT OF FREE WILL?

We think of freedom as being able to decide the what, when, who and why questions of our lives. However, in Christian understanding, freedom does not equal individual autonomy or individual liberty, or the power to choose. So what does Christian freedom mean?

God freely created human beings. And because we were created in the image and likeness of God, we have a share in God's freedom. For Christians, freedom is both a gift and a virtue. The New Testament writers understood freedom as not being free to do whatever one chooses but to be free from sin and death for the (Gal 5:1).

It is the community of faith that provides the environment and support in which we can be free from sin and selfishness. Freedom is the power to choose to do what is good. In other words, freedom is hard work – it requires ongoing conversion, a life of discipleship. No matter our circumstances, gifts, talents and skills, each and every one of us can use our freedom in God's service and participate in God's ongoing work of creation and redemption.
