Prayer: The Path to Surpassing Peace

The more deeply we know this truth and are convinced of it, the more joyful we can be.

Joy is the emotion that comes from having or possessing a good thing.

Most of this world's joys are fragile and passing, because this world's good things are fragile and passing.

But God's goodness, His selfless interest in and unconditional love for us, is never-changing, stable, constant, eternal.

The more we are aware of it and lay claim to it, the more joy we will experience and the more constantly we will experience it, coming gradually to discover what St. Paul describes in today's Second Reading as "the peace of God that surpasses all understanding".

And how can we deepen our knowledge and conviction of God's limitless goodness?

St. Paul says we must become people of prayer: offering to God all our worries, thanking Him for all our gifts, and contemplating all the good and noble things that God has done and surrounded us with.

The society around us, our own selfishness, and the devil try to clog up our minds with complaints and problems, so that we lose sight of the bigger picture.

Only by consciously lifting our hearts and minds to God, every day, throughout the day, do we gradually come to root our lives in the deep, rich soil of God's goodness.

How is our prayer life?

Does it consist merely of saying prayers?

Does it include heart-to-heart conversations with Christ?

Does it include time to reflect on God and His plans through reading the Bible and other spiritual books?

During Mass, as we renew our faith in God's boundless goodness and mercy, let's also renew our commitment to being Christians worthy of our name, Christians who love Christ enough to spend some time with him in personal prayer, every single day.
