What Does the Catholic Church Teach About...?

Question:

I have a question regarding the Mass, and if a priest gets ill and has to leave, what happens? This actually happened at a parish in Ohio.

My Answer:

There are several things that are taken into consideration in answering this question. When did the illness occur during the liturgy that caused the priest to leave the sanctuary? Was the priest able to return? Was there a Deacon present? There is a lot to consider.

First we need to understand that the Mass is a sacrificial celebration. A sacrifice requires a priest. In the absence of a priest there can be no Mass, but there can be a Communion Service, depending. The Ordinary of the Mass is the priest and the ordinary of a Communion Service in lieu of Mass is the Deacon. Now if I have thoroughly confused you by now, let me break it down for you.

Let's start with the Mass. If there is no Consecration, then there is no Mass. It is an essential part of a Mass Liturgy to consecrate bread and wine. Obviously there needs to be a priest to do this. A deacon or Lay person cannot consecrate. So that leads to the first part. If the priest leaves the Mass prior to the consecration there is no valid Mass. If a Deacon is present or a duly appointed Lay person a Communion Service may be executed. Again, this is only if there has been no consecration.

Next let's look at the scenario of a priest who has at least started the consecratory prayers, even if only one species has been consecrate and he has to leave Mass. If he is unable to return, another priest must take up where the original priest left off. The Mass must be completed. The Mass must be completed in the most expedient time frame possible. In the good old days there were plenty of priests around. Now days it may take a day to get a priest to come and complete the Mass.

There is no real time limit for a priest, once he leaves Mass, to return and complete the Mass himself. There are suggestions that an hour is reasonable.

Most of the rubrics for such a thing are old standards that still hold.

There are other nuances to these rules which are interesting, such as if a priest is unable to complete the consecration, but remains on the altar and another priest comes to finish the consecration, if possible, the original priest must receive Communion from the species that he consecrated. I picture a priest lying on the floor of the Sanctuary and another priest standing over him completing the Consecratory Prayer and then bending over to communicate the priest lying on the floor. I wonder if that ever happened.

Suffice it to say, there are rubrics for everything within the Liturgy and within the Church. It keeps us focused on what is important.

Canon Law Article 927 plus De Defectibus, promulgated by Pope Pius V in the 16th century,

Peace
