YEAR OF MARK

January 25th, 2015 Third Sunday in Ordinary Time

Paul writes to the Corinthians with the expectation of Jesus' imminent second coming. His view on this will change in later letters, but at this point he believes that "time is running out" (v29). This means the people should live with a strong awareness that "the world in its present form is passing away" (v31).

In Mark's text today we encounter another call narrative of the first apostles. Today's story is the more familiar one: Jesus calls the fishermen to drop their nets and follow him. For Mark, their immediate response – "they abandoned their nets and followed him" (v18) – emphasizes Jesus' authority. The sons of Zebedee also leave everything, including "their father ... in the boat" (v20), to follow Jesus. They will learn from him and take part in his mission to call others to "repent, and believe" (v15). The call is not merely to reject sin but also to embrace the way of the gospel; we are to reject evil and choose good. Jesus' call is to a radical reorientation of our lives. We are to live our lives in response to God's call.

Like the apostles, Jonah was called to preach God's word, specifically the call to repentance. After initially rejecting the calls, he embraced his mission and went to Nineveh. Jonah is unusual in that his preaching is addressed to gentiles, the citizens of Nineveh. His original reluctance is based on his belief that as sinners outside of Judaism, the people in that city did not deserve to hear the word of God, much less be transformed by it. We hear that as a result of his preaching, "the people of Nineveh believed God" (v5) and thereby avoided the evil God "have threatened to do to them" (v10).

For reflection: What am I willing to sacrifice for the sake of my call to be a disciple? Have I ever experienced or witnessed a radical conversion like that of the citizens of Nineveh? How did it serve as a sign of God's grace?
